How long have you been a family physician?

I've been a family physician in Alberta for 32 years.

Why did you choose family medicine?

I fell into it through an unusual route. I was doing my rotating internship with the intention of pursuing a neurology residency. I took a break from my education, and when I returned, I chose family medicine.

I work with a socially, economically and ethnically diverse patient population in Calgary. The variety is really interesting, and I am able to do everything from infant health to end-of-life care.

What do you enjoy about your work?

I enjoy my relationships with patients as I get to know them and their families. I can celebrate with them in the best times and help them through the worst times.

It sounds cliché, but I enjoy helping people. In addition to improving a patient's quality of life, I find it personally and intellectually satisfying to figure out what's going on with a patient and come up with a plan to manage their health.

Any thoughts about family medicine you want to share?

I know there is a lot of negativity about the status of family medicine, but I love what I do. I'm happy to come to work and have no plans to make any changes in the near future.
